THE SULTAN OF THE SULUS ENTERTAINS

A Party of Americans, Including Capt. D. B. Devore, Who Writes a Very Interesting Letter

OF A HUNT WHICH HE ENJOYED.

The Treachery of the Moros—How the Killing of Two American Soldiers Was Avenged.

Capt. D. B. Devore sailed from Manila last week for San Francisco, in command of a battalion of the 23rd regiment, which was the first of the regular troops to go to the Philippines. The captain has written several letters for the Intelligencer, from those islands, the last of which, dated Iolo, Iolo Island, May 26, is subjoined:

"Responding to an invitation from the Sultan of the Sulus for a hunt, we left here Tuesday morning and rode across the mountains about twelve miles to the palace, where we were served with very dainty native refreshments, which were half relished after our rough ride over mountain trails. During the afternoon we went with the sultan and his party about fifteen miles further to the royal hunting grounds, where we arrived at dark, finding a country club house, containing one room with sea-weed curulus hanging from bamboo joists for the sultan. Four of his wives which he brought along, his prime minister, chief advisor, entertainers and ourselves. A barbarous harangue was kept up most of the night, kindly intended for our amusement, which we endured patiently as stoics, though longing for rest and sleep. Our supper was very light, consisting of weak tea and some sweet, unpalatable mixtures prepared from native products. A Moro, and breakfast seemed to be hushed up from left-overs of the evening before. The sultan appeared to be satisfied, but this was not sufficient for our appetites; however, as favored guests of his royal highness we could do nothing but assume a contented air until an opportunity offered to unmask an emergency ration of hard tack, bacon and a can of water, which I brought along; this tasted like wedding cake and nectar and was much relished.

Hunting in Iolo.

It was a fine morning and we found ourselves in the middle of a large plain extending to the sea on one side, and meeting the slope of the mountains on the others. The grass and jungle weeds were tall and thick, except where burned over. Trees stood at regular, though wide intervals, over the expanse, making a picturesque view. Several hundred natives armed with spears and knives, mounted on ponies, were engaged to partake in the hunt. They distributed themselves in parties all over the plain and waited for the game—deer and wild boar—to be driven from the mountains by large numbers of other natives beating the bush. When the animals got to the plain they are, indeed, between "devils and the deep sea," and escape is almost impossible. The grass being high the game soon grows tired, if not killed, and when the ponies are there are fresh ones to join in. The Moros thoroughly enjoy this sport and enter into it with all the enthusiasm of wild barbarity. We could not join in the chase, as our ponies were unfitted for the hunt after the long ride, as we are much larger than the natives, and make too heavy a load to gallop through the high grass. Just as we were leaving the grounds we secured a fine fat deer, but our ponies were of too short range to bring him down. Our outing took us fifty miles over narrow trails, too rough and rugged in many places for any horse, except these ponies. The hunt was an interesting experience, but such sport is not adapted to western customs, though highly exciting and much enjoyed by the sultan and his subjects. There are some fine hemp fields, banana patches and coconut groves on this island, though none of them are properly cultivated. A little industry would soon develop valuable plantations. No person can purchase or become owner of land without the sultan's permission, which is not easily obtained. The Moro from the ruler to the slave, is generally worthless, although there are some enterprising pirates among them.

Treacherous Moros.

On one of the lower islands recently, two soldiers were killed and two very seriously wounded by the Moros. A party of five soldiers were out fishing and hunting by permission of the authorities, and the Moros were with them, showing every sign of friendliness and helping about camps, which they did for several days. Then, just before breaking camp, while the soldiers were sitting at a little primitive table, the natives attacked them unawares with knives, killing and crippling all but one, who was away on the beach at the moment. This one, with great difficulty, returned to the post, when about half the company went to the place of trouble. The commander demanded the murderers, who were in a town of some three hundred inhabitants. It took some diplomacy, as well as guns, to force their surrender, but the culprits were finally gotten, ten in number, and executed on the spot. Some excitement followed, but the effect was wholesome. They are a treacherous lot and put but little value on life.

Quarrels frequently occur among the natives. A few weeks ago I was detailed to go to Parang to investigate a local fight and try to make peace; at Selangkun I invited Dato Hadji Manglima Tahil to come aboard the launch and accompany me to the scene of trouble, as he claimed authority over that territory. I went ashore at Nonocan and Conwawal, villages of Parang, explained my business and invited the chiefs to come aboard. The investigation showed that the trouble arose over the selling of a rifle by one Moro to another, who refused to pay for it, as agreed. The matter was reported to Raja Muhda, the sultan's brother, who directed the seller to take from the buyer's people anything that could be had; whereupon a Moro girl was taken; this was resented, and an attempt made to recapture her. In the fight four were killed and several wounded. The affray was stopped and the chief of each faction gave security for $1,000 to keep the peace, the dispute to be settled in Moro court at the end of the fasting season. The sultan decreed that, should the fighting be renewed, fifty slaves would be required for himself and twenty for Raja Muhda. In addition to the forfeit.

When I went ashore the natives swarmed about me in large numbers, the men and boys all armed with keen knives—instruments of war, which weigh from three to five pounds, and a dexterous Moro can bend or divide a man at a single strike. If a freeman kills another—he is brought before one of the datus, and fined $108; however, if a slave is killed no fine is exacted. If a man owes a large sum of money he may balance his account by selling himself or his children to his creditor.

Toilets of the Moros.

The trousers of some Moros are a study in color. If the wearer has any social position or wealth, they are made of fancy goods of many colors, and are admired and envied in proportion to the variety and brilliancy of the colors, which should be glaring and of marked contrast to be a la mode. The fit of these trousers would be the envy of any "Six little tailors" in America; if they were but one color and the proper shade, one would not know that these Jolo duds were burdened with trowsers at all. The hardest work the wearers do is to change this leg covering, which requires about two hours, including the rest and cigarettes taken during the process.

Some of the women also wear trousers, but they are made upon a much more liberal pattern. Each division is sixteen times larger than its counterpart on the men—sixteen to one, which is impractical, reminds me that if proportion is also by a mistake. These women are daft on dyes and the height of fashion is limited by the gaudiness and number of colors worked into the flimsy fabric from which the trousers are made. Frequently a woman will fold in fanciful form a bolt of gauzy goods and toss it over one shoulder, which is all she wears if she is not too old. The children have no apparel to protect them from the elements except a rag or necktie.

Monkeys are plentiful and daring. Yesterday one of these animals, with more bravery than caution, entered my quarters, mounted a table and took possession of my watch which he was amusing himself when discovered. A bullet from my revolver despatched the thief, else the watch, a valued present from some Texas friends, would have become a bauble in the monkey colony.

BRIEF MENTIONINGS.

Events in and About the City Given in a Nutshell.

The potters will elect officers to-day.

To-morrow, at Pleasant Valley Park, the Wheeling Turnverein will celebrate its forty-seventh anniversary.

The ballot boxes and other paraphernalia are being placed in readiness for the loan ordinance election, July 17.

The old retorts have been removed from the city gas works and the work of placing the new ones in will begin in a few days.

On the 20th instant the Korn Kob Klub will give a dance and bowling party to its members and friends, at Mozart Park.

A bunch of keys was found below the Market street bridge yesterday, which the owner can get by calling at police headquarters.

An open meeting of the Trades Assembly will be held to-morrow afternoon to discuss the Uniontown railroad stock subscription.

Rev. Randall, the evangelist, is making another personal appeal for aid in his work, and is armed with a personal letter from Rev. C. B. Graham.

The council committee on health was called to meet at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, but only two of the members appeared, and the meeting was postponed until a later date.

Detective Steele, of Allegheny, came down yesterday for the purpose of taking charge of the diamond ring stolen from that city a few days ago by the man named Cramer, held in custody by the Wheeling police.

The iron and steel workers employed at the La Belle will hold a meeting to-day to decide what action to take regarding the refusal of the company to sign the Amalgamated Association scale. It is thought the men will refuse to return to work, unless the scale is signed.

One of the mules hitched to Nell & Ellingham's wagon fell at the wharf yesterday afternoon, and its foreleg became fastened under the gang plank of the wharfbait. The leg received a severe gash just above the hoof, and bled copiously until a veterinarian stung it down. Eleven men were required to raise the gang plank and release the animal from its uncomfortable position.

POLITICS

The Charleston convention special on the Ohio River road, bringing back nearly all of the Wheeling and Pan Handle delegates to the Republican state convention, arrived early yesterday morning, and after the all-night ride on a crowded train everybody was thoroughly worn out and in a mood to swear off on conventions in particular and politics in general—but a good night's rest will rejuvenate every man jack of the bunch, and to-day they'll be as ardent devotees of the great old game of politics as they ever were.

A number of the Pan Handle visitors remained in Charleston over night, preferring a night of peaceful repose in the quiet Kanawha county village to the excitement and turmoil of the special train. The Ohio Valley Express, coming in last evening, brought quite a bunch of the faithful, including Congressman Dovenor, Joseph C. Brady, John Schellhass, John Frew, Charley Hennins, C. B. Scott and others, including J. C. Burchinal, F. H. Blake, Prosecuting Attorney Parsons, Sheriff Doyle and others of the Marshall county delegation.

The speech of Mayor C. B. Scott, of Bethany, in seconding the nomination of James K. Hall for auditor, was a gem, and Mr. Hall's friends in Ohio county warmly complimented the sage from the banks of the Buffalo upon his effective appeal for the convention's favorable consideration of the claims of the First district's candidate.

Mr. Hall had assurances before the convention met of receiving nearly 600 votes, but the influences at work in behalf of Mr. Scherr, aided by the unexpected complication arising out of the contest between Freer and Shanor for the permanent chairmanship of the convention, were too much for even the magnificent organization the Ohio county man had built up in behalf of his candidacy.

The Fourth congressional district has three representatives on the Republican state ticket, in White for governor; Freer for attorney general, and Poffenbarger for supreme judge; the Second district comes next with two, Scherr for auditor, and Miller for superintendent of free schools; then the Third, with Silman for treasurer, and last (but farthest from least in Republicanism), the First district, with Judge Brannon for the supreme bench.

The First district Republican committee will meet here on July 23 to organize for the campaign, and the desires of Candidate Dovenor will be acceded to. Chairman S. G. Smith will likely be his own successor. Jacob Snyder, the Ohio county member of the committee, is spoken of for secretary-treasurer.

The First senatorial district convention will be held at Littleton, July 23. There are three avowed candidates for the nomination, Judge Jacob, ex-Senator Hoge and Mr. Clark, all of Wetzel county, to which the nomination goes this year by custom.

The Ohio county executive committee will meet next week, probably, to fix the time and manner of choosing the legislative ticket. Some of the aspirants for place on the ticket prefer a primary, others favor a convention on account of the expense. In addition to the candidates who have been in the field for weeks past, two other names are being mentioned, Messrs. Walter H. Rinehart and George A. Laughlin.

It is a part of the history of convention week at Charleston that plans were matured to stampede the convention to Freer for governor. Before the action of the committee on permanent organization in selecting Perry A. Shanor for chairman had been rescinded, and Judge Freer chosen in his stead, thus averting the entrance of the latter into a contest for governor, the Freer combination had even gone so far as to select the man who would make the speech nominating their favorite for governor. There are widely divergent views as to whether or not the game would have worked had it been attempted. Judge Freer's friends relied upon the belief that his turning down for governor, for Congress and for chairman of the convention would have worked up such a sympathetic sentiment that he could have got anything he went after. They claim this view is verified by the magnificent ovation he received when nominated for attorney general.

Garvin Family Reunion.

The Garvin family will have a reunion to-day, which promises to be well attended. Mr. D. M. Garvin, manager of the Lone Star Oil Company, Houston, Texas, an old Ohio county boy, arrived in the city last evening, via the Wheeling & Lake Erie, with his family, from Cleveland, Ohio, and is a guest of his brother, Attorney T. M. Garvin, of Leatherwood. Mr. Garvin has been a successful oil refiner and dealer in Texas for the last ten years, and comes home to attend the reunion of the family. Hon. J. B. Garvin, secretary of the state board of agriculture, arrived last evening, over the Ohio River road from Charleston. Miss Lizale L. Garvin arrived at 6:15 p. m. yesterday, from Pittsburgh, over the Pan Handle. Miss Lella Garvin of New Athens, O., arrived over the Cleveland, Lorain & Wheeling. Many other friends are expected to arrive early this morning.

In Justice Fitzpatrick's court yesterday, the case of Annie Schweinherder was heard. She was charged by Gertrude Thomas with being disorderly. She was fined $1 and costs and placed under a bond of $50 to keep the peace for one year.

To-day the case of Dave O'Neil, charged with breach of the peace and being disorderly, will be heard. Katie Davis is the complainant in the case. The case of Mary Young, charged by Louisa Taylor with being disorderly, will be heard this afternoon at 1 o'clock. Gertrude Thomas will be defendant in a disorderly case this afternoon, and Annie Schweinherder, complainant.
